to a year on Blackwell's Island for attempted supernation of perjury prior to the diverge action of Helen K. Gould against Frank Jay Gould.

Justice Laughlin, writing the decision, says that convincing evidence was introduced that the defendant did wilfully attempt to induce Mabel MacCausland to testify falsely and that it appears that Mrs. Teal was to get money for procuring the testimony. He finds that while the issues in the defendant are just as represensible as if issue had been joined." The court finds that the evidence ma broad sense was material. The court cites a recent decision that the crime of attempting larcen by stealing from the pocket of a person may be committed although there is nothing in the pocket.
